

Confucius Says....

1. What qualities of Confucius do you think might have made him a good teacher? Do you think he would still be considered a good teacher if he were alive today in our own society? Why or why not?

Confucius's qualities of dignity, respect for others, eagerness to learn, loyalty, faithfulness, and humbleness were what made him a great teacher, not only his teachings. Yes, I think he would still be considered a good teacher even if he were alive today, because the modern society lacks order, respect for others, and the sense of honesty and loyalty. Thus, if he emphasized those values that are lost from the modern society, it would bring a significant change to the modern society.

2. What qualities do you think Confucius would look for in an educated person?

Some of the qualities Confucius might look for from an educated man would be the eagerness to learn, courage to explore, not putting himself more superior to the others, seeking righteousness.

3. How do you think Confucius saw his own role?

Confucius believed that his own role was not to dictate to lives of people, but rather, to help them to seek changes that would bring a positive influence to the society. He believed that it was his responsibility as a knowledgeable man to guide people to the path of learning and righteousness.
